Japan: Samurai Cities in Modern Japan
For almost seven hundred years of Japanese history, samurai belonged to the ruling elite. They also built many castle towns, some of which later developed into cities of global importance. This faculty-led study abroad program with Japan historian Maren Ehlers, will visit Tokyo, Kamakura, and Aizu-Wakamatsu to explore these samurai cities and their changes over time. This program is open to undergraduate students with a 2.0 GPA and offers courses in History, International Studies, and Japanese.
2018 Summer I Programs

Israel: Mt. Zion Archaeological Excavation
The purpose of the Mount Zion Project is to expose, examine and preserve all levels of habitation over the course of Jerusalem's 3,000-year history. This site shows evidence of habitation from the modern period back through Ottoman, Islamic, Crusader, Byzantine, Roman and ancient Israeliite levels. This project is a unique opportunity for the city of Charlotte to have an historic presence in the Old City. This program is open to graduate students and sophomores, juniors, and seniors. It offers courses in History and Religious Studies and is led by Dr. Robert McEachnie. The application deadline for this program is February 1st, 2018.

Poland: Preserving Memory in a Digital Age
Students will travel to Europe as part of a two-week field experience after completing a multi-campus course during spring semester. In addition to cemetery restoration and documentation work, students will visit Auschwitz, numerous museums and world heritage sites and explore how historians address commemoration and memorialization. The project immerses students in public history, providing them a unique opportunity to consider how historians partner with the public. This program is open to all undergraduate students. It is led by Dr. Aaron Shapiro and offers courses in History. The application deadline for this program is November 1st, 2017.
